Password Cracking Experiments

In our case, the main objective of the classroom experiments is to see what kinds of passwords are breakable. In addition our students also learn to use the existing software tools and more importantly to use it for a productive purpose. Our students also learn to manage the domain as a system administrator. To add the pedagogic value of peer-learning, students are encouraged to do the hands-on experiments in teams where one student comes with the password and other tries to break it

These experiments can be conducted in any networking laboratory set up with available free open source software tools. It is strongly recommended to consult with the school system administrator before conducting this experiment to know more about security threats. Make sure to enforce the rule to turn off the Internet connection while conducting the experiment. Students should have exposure to basic networking and fundamentals of computer security before doing these experiments.

In our class, the experiments were conducted in a Windows environment laboratory without Internet connection. We chose two popular open source password cracking software tools L0phtcrack (LC4) [6] and SAM Inside [7] for our experiments. As noted above, LC4 is a password auditing and recovery application tool. It provides two critical capabilities to Windows network administrators, (1) to secure Windows-authenticated networks through comprehensive auditing of Windows NT and Windows 2000 user account passwords (2) to recover Windows user account passwords to streamline migration of users to another authentication system or to access accounts whose passwords are lost. SAM Inside is another password recovery program used in the experiment which can crack passwords much faster than LC4 and the core part of the program is written in assembly language. This program also supports Mask attack, Dictionary attack, Hybrid attack, and Attack with Rainbow tables.

All the experiments were conducted in Windows environment computers and students were able to login as administrators. The demo versions of both software tools have limited access with few testing features. For instance, LC4 demo version can not perform Brute Force attack where as this is possible with SAMInside demo version. Following steps were performed during the experiments:

- Download software tools demo versions LC4 [5] and SAMInside [6]
- Create several accounts with passwords. Select Start → Control Panels → Account Users → Add new user and set password. Create four accounts with usernames Arthur, Boxworthy, Carmella, and Dixon
 - 4 local users
 - Username – Arthur; Password – up77
 - Username – Boxworthy; Password – b0xw0rthy
 - Username – Camela; Password – Arthur
 - Username – Dixon; Password – Dixon51
- Install LC4. Run LC4 and choose retrieve from local machine, select strong password audit, and select all reporting styles
